A CONSORTIUM OF NASA AEROSPACE ENGINEERS FUNDING CHARITIES BY DEVELOPING THE "HIGH-TECH" PRODUCTS OF TOMORROW.

INFORMATION ON OUR INVENTION COMPANY

I head a group of volunteer Aerospace Engineers from NASA, JPL and so on. We invent high tech toys, start the patent process, and license our innovative technologies to established toy companies and give all the money to charity.

I run the charity entitled, www.HopeForHomelessYouth.org, that we support. Check our website. Please watch our short documentary (Ray of Hope) on reaching troubled youth of the inner city hosted by the actor Edward James Olmos. This charity rescues, and rehabilitates, troubled, underprivileged, abandoned, youth of the inner-city.

As far as inventing is concerned. We have a good track record, as members of our nonprofit Inventors Consortium we have licensed well over 80 million in toys to companies such as Mattel, Fisher-Price and Hasbro, and hold 79 utility patents. (a list available upon request)

Anyway we have a Google Drive video file of 3 minute demo videos of 50 magical high tech concepts most of which we've started the patent process or have patents for. Many are kind of a magical, Star Wars, power of the force type and a lot are new RC concepts. We have everything from a technology that uses your empty hand moving through empty space to control every form of flying and ground vehicles. Some magical vehicles follow an invisible beam. We hold the world's only utility patent that offers any propeller driven flying craft to have no exposure of any moving parts. We have a high-tech robot spider that interacts with people's movements in the room, when he gets really mad he shoots disappearing ink and carries your hidden cell phone to record people's reactions and have two-way visual communications. Our list of innovation goes on and on.

If you are looking for new innovative concepts we would love to email our files to you.
